The Clark Atlanta University School of Business Administration Story ...

The Year 2009 marks the 78th Anniversary of the Undergraduate program and the 63th Anniversary of the Graduate School of Business. Since awarding our first BA degree in 1931 and our first MBA degree in 1947, the School of Business Administration at Clark Atlanta University has been molding some of the nation's best students into the nation's best business leaders. We have always been a pioneer in business education for African-Americans and other people of color.

Clark Atlanta University School of Business Administration was one of the first Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCU) in the nation to have its undergraduate and graduate business programs accredited by AACSB-International. And, we have been continuously accredited longer than any other HBCU.

The School of Business Administration continues to produce one of the largest classes of African-American MBAs in the world, while our undergraduate program is one of the top ten percent producers of African-American business professionals in the nation.

Clark Atlanta University School of Business:

- Ranked 7th in the nation for the recruitment of minority MBA candidates by The Wall Street Journal (October, 2004).
- Ranked 3rd in the nation as the place where minorities go to receive MBA degrees by CareerJournal.com (2004).
- Declared a "Hidden Gem," among the nation's best business schools in Business 2.0(2003).
- Rated best return on investment, "The Quickest Payback," by Business Week (October, 1998).
